You will be able to research in the South Carolina Room before or after the meeting. Please invite your friends and neighbors to get started on their journey of discovering their family. We would love to help them.

450 year-old music fragment gets belated encore

The ancient sheet music was performed at Holy Trinity Church in Haddington.

Published: 16/08/2014 09:00 Edinburgh News

Retrieved: September 10, 2014.

A NEWLY discovered sheet of music from pre-Reformation times is set to be sung for the first time in 450 years.

The fragment had been used to cover the Haddington town treasurer's account book, which dates back to 1579, and was only rediscovered around 18 months ago.

It will now be brought back to life by the St John's and St Mary's Cathedral choirs during a public lecture on September 8.

Rev Dr Holmes, who is also the associate rector of St John's Church on Princes Street and Honorary Fellow in church history at Edinburgh University School of Divinity will analyze it as well as explain pre-1560 worship in Scotland.

He said: "The fragment gives a precious glimpse into the culture and religion of Haddington before the destruction caused by John Knox.

"It is a chance to hear music that would have been heard in Haddington 500 years ago."

The music was only found when items were being transferred from the National Archives, where it had been held for almost 100 years, to the new John Gray Centre in the East Lothian town.

There were more than 10,000 books for worship in Scotland before 1560, but only 89 books and 88 fragments survived.

East Lothian Council archivist Frances Woodrow said: "The page is from a religious book and it was used in the Reformation almost like you would to cover a school jotter.

"There's not much else like this – we have something in Musselburgh where a papal bull was used to cover a volume, but this is very clear so that's why they have been able to get so much from it.

"They had a different set of chants for every Sunday so that's why they can pinpoint it down to the exact date it was sung. The most exciting thing is we will hear it again."

Ms Woodrow said the fragment could be viewed at the John Gray Centre after the lecture at the Holy Trinity Church.

Rector Anne Dyer said: "It is over 450 years since this piece of church music was sung in Haddington, and it will be a pleasure it to hear it in this setting."

Welcome to HHARP, the home of 19th century children's hospital records

We are very pleased to announce the addition of a new database of admission records to the HHARP website: the Royal Hospital for Sick Children, Glasgow. Covering the period 1883 (when the hospital first opened) to 1903, the database offers insight into the health of the poor child in the Scottish city of Glasgow, complementing databases already available for three London hospitals: the Hospital for Sick Children at Great Ormond Street, the Evelina Hospital and the Alexandra Hospital for Children with Hip Disease. In HHARP family historians can find patients by name, medical historians can study childhood diseases and investigate pioneering medical staff, while demographers can analyze incidence of disease in Victorian and Edwardian London. It provides access to nearly 120,000 individual admission records between 1852 and 1914; and a collection of articles on the early history of the hospitals, pen-portraits of personalities who inhabited them and a gallery of images.

Browse around the site to discover its treasures. Better still, register now. It costs nothing, and registered users get access to more detailed information and the ability to print and download results of searches.
